Special Session: Gamification of Learning (Gamilearn'18) at EDUCON 2018

The inclusion of game experiences in learning processes has been positively shown as a technique to motivate learners. Thus, experiences are introduced in courses by considering game design principles in non-leisure environments like the course structure layout (gamification or gameful design). This topic has garnered great interest in both academia and industry, as reflected by the amount of academic publications in the recent years, especially those showing case studies, hands-on experiences, or business growth of the enterprises specialized in gamification.

This Special Session (Gamilearn'18) aims to cover all aspects of gamification including user studies, design frameworks, techniques and strategies, methodologies, tools and applications, ecosystems, analysis and assessment, personalization approaches, systems integrations, data management, architectures, innovations to market, as well as any work in progress. Our main goal is to bring together stakeholders for exchanging ideas and experiences and encouraging networking between academia and industry.

Topics of Interest

We welcome submissions from all topics of gamification applied to any learning process, including but not limited to the following:

- User studies
- Design frameworks
- Techniques and strategies
- Methodologies
- Tools and applications
- Technological ecosystems
- Analysis processes
- Assessment processes
- Personalization approaches
- Systems integrations
- Data management
- Architectures

Important dates

We kindly invite authors to submit their full papers for review by November 20th, 2017, following the submission guidelines published at EDUCON website:
